In Jakarta, Tropical Forest Alliance To Seek Common Ground For Throttling Deforestation

Author: Kelli Barrett

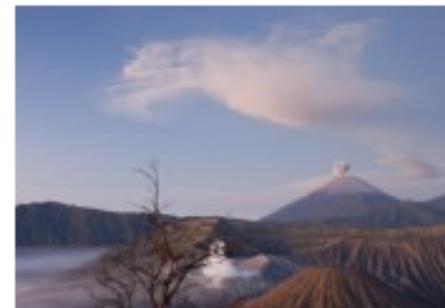

Hundreds of companies have pledged to purge deforestation from their supply chains, but most are struggling to deliver in a world where millions of tiny suppliers provide their raw

Indonesia Aims For Top-Tier Carbon Accounting Across All Land Types By 2018, But Peat Proves Problematic

Author: Steve Zwick and Kelli Barrett

Indonesia can now measure the carbon flowing into and out of its forests with 95% accuracy, but it's the peat fires that make it one of the world's largest emitters of Palm, an estimated 60% of palm oil exports (approximately 16 million tons) have displaced forests in Indonesia and Malaysia since 2000. Palm oil is used in a variety of products, from snack foods to personal care products to biofuels and chemicals. While oil palm is the highest-yielding vegetable oil crop, plantation expansion has been linked to deforestation. The key products include palm fruit, crude palm oil, palm kernel oil, and palm oil derivatives.
